The attribution to Sigea and Meursius was a lie; the true author was Nicolas Chorier. His relationship to the Ilkhans suggests that they, at least, saw him and his possessions as ultimately belonging to them and that they made little distinction between public and private. The Rugrats set out to prove Spike's innocence; after hearing Boris' story about a hero fighting off the " dibbick " monster with his "klobbermeister", the Rugrats go into the garage in search of this "monster". However, unlike a reception line, it does not give the guests an opportunity to speak to any of the people being presented. The book's sequence is primarily chronological based on the narrative content of the book. Together, the level of genetic differentiation, linked disequilibrium,
