Forget your John-Hughes-movie stereotypes. As it is, the revised work's title is redolent of late-Victorian pictorialization, suggesting something that our great-grandparents might have listened to with a smile on their faces: but it is a far stronger work than that implies, and is one of the first major orchestral works to bring folk music, as the basis for a large work, into the concert hall - the piece was surely a major inspiration for Delius's Brigg Fair of Beecham also recorded these variations and I can pay Aadland no greater compliment than to set his alongside Beecham's recording as an interpretation: the younger man's control of structure and quality of his orchestra make this a first choice for the work, yet there is something in the Bergen orchestra's turn of phrase, its almost instinctive response to this music, which cannot be gainsaid.
